

UK Motorists embrace PetrolPrices.com

28th November 2005

The Launch of PetrolPrices.com has taken the United Kingdom by storm. Motorists, with their eyes firmly fixed on pump prices, have welcomed this breakthrough, allowing them free access to valuable money-saving data.

The first five days of operation were a phenomenal success; over 200,000 motorists visited the site to check their cheapest option for fuel. From that number, in excess of 80,000 subscribed to the free service and are able to receive regular e-mail alerts.

One delighted motorist, David Ramsey, commented:

"Great stuff! I saved £6.00 yesterday just by being aware of fuel prices. I didn't go too far out of my way either. I will certainly spread the word, thanks again."

Positive feedback has been flooding in all week from overjoyed motorists realising that they can save money on fuel by being more aware. An awareness delivered by PetrolPrices.com.

George Kinghorn from Durham wrote:

"Hi Brendan, I love the new site - just saved me 3p a litre by showing me I should fill up in Newcastle (where I work) and not Durham (where I live)".
